

A MOREHOUSE Reading, Watching, Listening List

COLLEGE

Background and Rationale.

In the 1980s and 90s, and perhaps long before, Morehouse College circulated a book list among incoming student scholars. The list represented an opportunity for the Community to engage in deep learning with critical reading, writing and thinking across disciplines and a variety of topic areas. It offered a baseline for professors and students to reference.

The list was daunting — so many titles. Amazing titles, but so many.

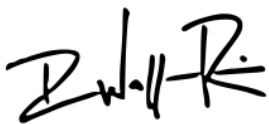

Given the book list came from Morehouse, it centered the Black genius in our lived experience with special attention to Black men.

Since that type-written book list from years ago, things have changed relative to how we get information and in terms of how Black men and boys sit in relationship to the diaspora and to the larger world. Books are still foundational, but it's crucial that we are literate across and through a variety of media.

Offered here is a collection of books, television shows, films, albums and other materials that are hyperlinked to provide summaries for the books, tv shows, films, and most albums, and full-reads or views for the internet content.

As I appreciatively explain to friends, colleagues, and students whenever I 'drop' a new iteration of the list — Like it. Dislike it. Argue it's too long. Make your own list from it, or because of it. However you engage, the hope is that the collection is helpful in the freedom work that you are to do.

Looking forward,

David Wall Rice, PhD.
